THE GRAIN GROWERS ASSOCIATION, MANITOUE LAKE

BY ROBERT JUKES

There will be a meeting of the local branch of the Grain Growers Association at Brady School, on the 2nd of August.

The business of the meeting will be of a general character, and it is earnestly hoped that all members will attend if possible.

It is extensively realized that in view of the many additional fields of activity upon which the Association proposes to engage, among which may be mentioned the business of a Fire Insurance Company, it is desirable for all locals to study the existing situation, and also take a survey of the future.

In many parts of Saskatchewan, a fear has been expressed that some of the locals were gradually perishing.

We don't for a moment anticipate any such unhappy fate for the Manitou Lake branch acquainted as we are with the active and latent powers of its executive.

In all organizations however, moments occur when these "latent" forces are all the better for a friendly "shake"—and it is considered that the time has arrived when this operation might be attempted with the prospect of probable results.

Mr. Musselman, as we need hardly remind our readers, has lately, in that vigorous and picturesque language of which he is a master, drawn attention to the "funeral" of some promising locals.

Mr. Musselman in his observations implied that the blame for this condition of affairs lies with the locals.

We entirely differ from this opinion and still maintain the view that we have on previous occasions expressed in these columns, that however energetic a local Secretary may be in the use of the 'Whip'—if he is not backed up and kept in close touch with the central office, he is severely handicapped—This backing has sometimes been slack.

The G.G.A. has outgrown the dreams of Frank Green—who became a force in the politics and social life of the Dominion, though still only in its early youth.

It behoves its members to recollect that ALL its interests and hopes do not exclusively centre round an apple, a bundle of twine, or a lump of coal.

When The Bloom Is On The Rye

Rye, (as a field crop) being all the rage just now, it isn't surprising that the popular pastime at present with some of us, is driving round by "Farmer Felton's" to see how his 'rye' is coming on. And coming on, it certainly is, being now of a profitable length for cutting, and blooming in defiance of wind, and parsimonious rainfall.

Farmer Felton, himself, with that retiring modesty which makes such but gives us to understand that like a charming trimming for success, denies having any hand in the result. Topsy 'he' 'specks it just growed'.

While he is in the way of making records for himself, he evidently thinks that making another won't hurt, so he has invested in three Holstein cattle, whose fine milking qualities are bound to make the editor use bigger figures yet, when he gets to boasting about Chauvin's shipments of cream.

Mr. Max Campbell was a visitor in Killarney Lake last Sunday. He reports good crops in certain parts of the Manitou Lake district, and says some of his looking promising, but cautiously refuses to Hallo till he's out of the wood.

Mr. T. Armour and the boys have now returned from taking in the Edmonton Show. He expresses himself as much pleased with the looks of the Hereford Cattle, which were in much better shape than most of the other breeds represented. He is of the opinion that certain pedigreed animals in our own district are superior to some of the other breeds in exhibition. (Is this Chauvin? The Clydes also are not as compared to Old Country showings, but doubtless wintering conditions would have something to do with a certain leanness of look.

But the high Steppers! they were the stuff! better than any car." and other outbursts of enthusiasm which are maybe, natural coming from one whose first love has ever been a high-stepper, but whose daily calling necessitates him spending most of his time driving the 'patient plugs' of the horse family.

As for the boys, life out of doors is a passage perilous, for everything these days, from the "humble Grumpy" to the unwary sister, who happens not to be watching what's coming.

Lassoing everything in sight, whether necessary or not, being the chief business of life at present, that, and the gathering together of stuff to make an aeroplane, which having no fixed place of abode is decidedly 'de trop' most of the time!

Lieut. Rupert Perry may not be able to warble the old song about "Meet me in the evening when the bloom is on the rye" But he knows how to go through the figure alright—and with a military dash, too!

CHAUVIN G.W.V.A. WILL MEET SATURDAY NEXT, JULY 26TH

The regular meeting of the Crauvin branch of the Great War Veterans Association of Canada will be held at the Chauvin school house at two o'clock, Saturday, July 26th.

Letters to the Editor

ALL BUSINESS HOUSES IN THE VILLAGE were closed on the 19th instant in accordance with the plan adopted throughout the Dominion for this great occasion.

It is indeed a pleasure to see the whole of our business men in Chauvin willing to demonstrate their loyalty and their appreciation of the great victory gained by the allies, as well as their sense of gratitude to the men who represented them in the great struggle, by abstaining to do business on that day.

We heard of only one business man who opened his business on that day; or some part of that day. We would be sorry to think this party deliberately did so with the idea of gaining some advantage over his fellow business men, or with the intention of giving us to understand that it did not matter to him that the Great War was over, or which of the combatants won in the contest for world power.

At the same time, such actions are, to say the least, open to grave doubts, surely it should be sufficient to any loyal subject to know that the representative of our Dominion has requested that a thing shall be done, and for nun to do his part: especially when his part is only to make holiday to celebrate something worth while. It is a pity that there should be even such a small fly in the ointment of our gladness at this time the more so for the reason that so many of the men who thought the struggle so worth while are now here again with us, and understood what they were celebrating, and would be likely to misunderstand any man who did not feel loyal on this particular day.

Perhaps something should have been done immediately to test the loyalty of the party in question, or it may be that it is not too late to obtain some satisfaction. We think the G.W.V.A. should make a note of this.

AN IRISHMANS LUCK OUR SERIAL STORY

CHAPTER XXI An Embarrassing Meeting

As Evelyn opened the post office the mail-man was just retying his bag preparatory to resuming his journey, and receiving directions from Mary Ann for the delivery if sundry parcels in 'Sweden' fir the mail-man acted as a means of communication between the two settlements. 'Here's a bundle from Mrs. McTavish for Mrs. Jensen makes the rag carpet, and that plough point agin the door is for Carl Swanson, and this little parcel is for "old man" Neilson—yes, that's all and Mary Ann held the door open for the mailman's departure. No, father does not want anything next ship from town she added decisively, for the mail man looked inquiringly at 'Old Dawson,' who was edging his way rather furtively towards the door with his cap in his hand, and Mary Ann closed the door sharply and turned towards Evelyn and shook her hands.

'I am sure I am very glad to see you, Miss Raye, though you find us all of a muss—what with the work outside and the office and all, father's back is bad, so he says, and there's mother laid up with the bronchitis and not able to turn.'

'Oh, I'm so sorry, Miss Dawson,' said Evelyn sympathetically; 'I hope your mother is not seriously ill—she is always so brisk and busy.'

'Well, when mother lays up you may be sure it's not just fancy—she's one of the kind as'll work till they drop, she's not like some, Mary Ann added, with a suggestive, if unintentional, emphasis on the 'some.'

'How long has your mother been ill?' asked Evelyn as she laid down her hat and pail and took the chair alone writing.'

Mary Ann had drawn forward to the stove. It's a wonder none of the children told me at school—they generally know everything.

'Well she has not been real well all Fall, and last week I was down at a neighbour's nursing for a couple of days, and mother took a chill; nobody, round it seems, so much as to put the cows in the stable and to milk them, or feed the pigs. I packed her off to bed, you may be sure, as soon as I got home, and there she stays till she gets the cold off her chist.'

I'm sure she will be well looked after now, but did you send to the doctor, Mr. Dawson?' asked Evelyn of the latter, who having put on a pair of spectacles was commencing to sort the letters and papers on the table.

'No, I didn't,' answeed Old Dawson sulkily, for he was feeling rather sore for reasons of his own, 'common folks like us 'ens can't be sending for the doctor every day and paying him ten dollars to come and look wise. Mary Ann has been nursing other folks for ten year and sure she can mind the "old woman" through a bit of a cold. I never send far no doctor, though my back is that bad these days.'

'Oh, never mind your back,' interrupted Mary Ann sharply. 'It's not the money, Miss Raye, but you see I can do all that is to be done. I put a couple of mustard plasters—front and back—as soon as I got home, and she's had a flannel with some goose grease on her chist night and day since, and I always keep a drop of whisky in the house, where it's safe and she's doing nicely. I'll not be leaving her again to other folk's care—but she'll be real glad to see you if you can stay while I sort the Dingle mail.'

'Well, you'd best be helping him—if it's to be done to night—when "himself" can hardly read books print alone writing.'

'Don't worry, mother, we will manage all right—and I'll come and tell you when you're mail is ready, Miss Raye,' and Mary Ann left the room drawing to but not closing the door.

Evelyn had visited too many querulous and rheumatic old villagers in her father's parish at home to feel embarrassed by Mrs. Dawson's rather grudging reception. She told her in an easy and quiet way such little news of the doings of the settlement as she herself had heard from the school children, and under her sympathetic influence in a little while Mrs. Dawson was giving her—between rather short breaths and fits of coughing—a detailed account of how she was 'took' with the chill. As this involved some severe strictures on the deficiencies of 'himself' in looking after the cows and the stables, Evelyn endeavoured to switch the conversation on to more kindly lines by asking if her minister had been to see her since she was laid up.

She was only too successful. 'No, he's not, and it's not myself that would be sending for him. The last time they came round gathering for his salary, Samuel—that's my husband grumbled at that. No, I'll never be sending, not if the Lord takes me without seeing the minister at all. Maybe the Lord knows I'm a sinner, but He knows I've never needed to be ashamed of the colour of my whites on the line of a Monday morning, and my house floor maybe is cleaner than some of them 'ens as goes trapping to every "vangelist" meeting as comes along,' and the old lady relapsed from her energy into a fit of coughing which left her exhausted and choking for breath.

Evelyn leaned over her to try and catch the words the old woman was struggling to articulate between her fits of coughing. 'Well, I happened to be driving up from town and thought I would call as I came by,' and both relapsed into silence as Bert gave the lines a shake and the mare started off.

A very awkward and embarrassed silence as they drove down the lane and turned into the town line, for in each mind there was a question clamouring for an answer—and a question that could not be asked without obvious implications. In Bert's mind, Has she heard of the burning of tre stacks, and of Jack's trouble in town? If those confounded women at the office have heard, she knows it all and a lot more; and if she hasn't how am I, of all men, to tell her—to be kind to her, yet true to Tom?

And in Evelyn's, 'Why is Bert here—why has he been to town—and why to-night, of all nights, is he driving home with Tom's mare and no word of Tom or the threshing? I must know what has happened and what lies behind this brusqueness—I must know—but he must not dream why I must know.'

As always, the woman's courage to face the dreaded unknown was greater than the man's and the woman's intuition quicker to divine that it is self revealing to question than to be questioned. Moreover, a woman guarding the secret of an unasked and unacknowledged love is more inscrutable than the Sphinx, and as unscrupulous as an Old Bailey lawyer.

'It's too bad that my benevolent intention of saving you a trip to the office should have been spoilt after all, Mr. Bert,' and Evelyn's voice was light and almost flippant, 'but you know it's your own fault, for you said last night that you were going threshing or something and would not be home till after dark—and I knew the girls would like to get the English mail.'

'Oh yes, I know I did, and it's very kind of you, but you see—trey—we did not thresh to-day,' and Bert hesitated. 'Ah—did you hear any news at the office?'

'Now, let me see—oh yes—"himself" has a lame back—but I'm afraid that isn't news—and poor old Mrs. Dawson is quite ill—that selfish old man won't send for the doctor—and oh—if you should see their minister I'm sure she would like to see him, though she won't send to ask him to come because "himself" is too mean to pay his share of the minister's salary. I suppose it was too windy to thresh to-day?—the last very casually and in the face of a day-long calm! Or did the engine misbehave itself? I know Daisy says there never was a threshing yet when something did not go wrong.'

'Oh, there was an accident at Berg's last night—no one hurt, you know,' added Bert hastily, and Jack Dennis went to town for some new teeth for stand by the window and gently raised her head and held the cup to her lips.

'Now, Mrs. Dawson, you must not try to talk any more or your daughter will think I am making you worse instead of better,' and gently pressing her hand in farewell Evelyn stepped quickly across the floor and into the post office.

Mary Ann was tying together with a piece of binding twine a bundle of letters and papers. 'There you are, Miss Raye, I was just coming for you I heard mother coughing; she will talk, if there's ever a body to talk to, but she'd be thatt vexed if I let you go without seeing her;—but there's some one just drove up to the door—maybe it's some of your folks and you'll get a drive home.'

'Oh, I don't think so,' replied Evelyn not be sent with the horse. Good-bye, Ing at—thresring, and the boy would again,' and Evelyn opened the door quickly. Mr. Bert is away threst and stepped out to meet Bert Ender Dennis's mare and buckboard a few yards away.

'There now, I told you, Miss Raye,' exclaimed Mary Ann, with obvious delight tat the 'rencontre'—could anything be more in keeping with the fitness of things? 'Now, that's real cute of you, Mr. Bert, to guess as how you would find the schoolmarm here and to bring the rig and all; I was just telling her as how it would be you when I heard the rig drive up.'

Evelyn and Bert were too mutually surprised and embarrassed for different reasons to catch the purport of Mary Ann's innuendoes, and were both glad too of a moment to regain their composure under cover of Mary Ann's chatter. Evelyn was the first to speak. 'I called round for the mail as I came from school and then stayed to have a chat with Mrs. Dawson; I thought I should be saving you a trip. Good-bye, Mrs. Dawson; and then Bert, as he turned the buckboard so that she might get in, and taking his own seat by her side, 'Well, I happened to be driving up from town and thought I would call as I came by,' and both relapsed into silence as Bert gave the lines a shake and the mare started off.

A very awkward and embarrassed silence as they drove down the lane and turned into the town line, for in each mind there was a question clamouring for an answer—and a question that could not be asked without obvious implications. I know Daisy says there never was a threshing yet when something did not go wrong.'

'Oh, there was an accident at Berg's last night—no one hurt, you know,' added Bert hastily, and Jack Dennis went to town for some new teeth for the separator and—and—afte' he left—Tom's spoilt this mare of his, and Bert gave an irritated jerk to the reins; 'she wants either to go on to the tearing canter or else just to crawl.'

Poor old thing—I expect she likes to have her own way. You were saying after Mr. Jask went to town?'

'Some stupid ass dropped a light near Berg's straw stacks—'

'And they burnt up?—Or that's too bad!'

'Oh, that didn't matter—his grain was all safe—but—'

'Why, Mr. Bert, you are almost as slow in telling me as Mr. Dennis's mare's walk.'

Poor Bert was desperate, and in his despair made the inevitable 'faux pas'—beautiful typical of his sex in a tight corner—a mistake that braced up Evelyn's self-protecting banter to the last notch. I'm slow in telling you because I hate to hurt you—because it hurts me to hurt you—the fire spread to the Dennis's and their could have sworn he felt a start and quiver in the form pressed so near to him by the narrow seat of the buckboard, but the voice was as steady and as inexpressive as ever.

'Oh, that's too bad, I'm so sorry—do let her take her own time, Mr. Bert,' for Bert was again jerking on the reins. 'I suppose Mr. Jack will be more severe on the farm life than ever. So you and Mr. Hardie had all your hurry and early rising for nothing?'

Had the girl no feeling at all?—Bert was utterly at sea—or had he been blind all summer? If there was nothing where he had been sure there was so much what a fool he had made of himself—if she didn't care for Tom was it possible?—at least it made the telling of the rest of his story easier, and he hurried on with an account of Jack's mishap and his own visit with Tom to town.

Evelyn spoke but little; she was sympathetic now in such little questions as she asked, but it was purely a conventional sympathy—so it seemed to Bert who alternated between hot flashes of a wild hope of possibilities for his own love and shudders of disgust at what surely was disloyalty to his friend. It was nearly dark as they neared the Dingle lane and he brought his tale to a conclusion. 'So it was Evelyn who asked. I suppose Mr. Jack, if this wretched man recovers, and, as you say, can be bribed not to prosecute, I suppose Mr. Jack will volunteer for South Africa—he told me he was aching to go—and his brother will come back to the farm?'

By this time Bert's tender carefulness to spare Evelyn was quite lulled to sleep. 'Oh, if Jack goes, Tom will go too. After losing the crop he could not stay on the place without help from his people at home, and that he said he would not ask; besides the disgrace of this affair of Jack's.'

'What disgrace is that to Mr. Tom Dennis, pray, that his brother would not allow a miserable wretch to insult the Queen? Who says it is a disgrace—his friends?'

'Oh no, I did not mean that—poor Jack has the sympathy of everybody in town—but Tom feels the shame of his brother being locked up in the cells and the trial if there has to be one—and their name in the police news, and—you know Jack is the youngest boy in the family, Tom pledged himself to his mother to stand between Jack and harm—will you hold the lines while I open the gate?'

'It was too bad of you not to let me get out—never mind the fastening—please tell them I've had my supper, and Bert drove on to the stable. I wonder, after all if she cares for Tom?—But she couldn't have taken it like that if she did—yet why did she snap me up so quickly about Jack?—and her voice was as cold as an icicle—his friend!—and I fighting my own heart all the summer because I thought that she loved Tom—I wonder—' and still wondering, Bert put the mare in the stable and fed her and returned slowly to the house to find that Evelyn had gone straight to her room on the plea of an headache from the stuffiness of Mrs. Dawson's room, whilst Daisy was waiting for a full account of the happenings at Conemara Farm and of his trip to town—a brief note which Bert had sent back by JJ Jim Harbie in the morning saying that the Dennis crop was burned and that he had gone to town, having left the Dingle family in a state of wonderment and anxiety.

30,000 Alberta Cattle

As a result the present crisis in the cattle industry in Alberta where there has been a total failure of hay and other fodder crops, leaving, according to reports, approximately 150,000 head of cattle without food, the Manitoba department of agriculture has decided to purchase between 25,000 and 30,000 head for the farmers of this province.

Homestead Rules To Be Enforced More Rigidly Now

As a result of representations made to the minister of the interior by E. G. Hingley and W. J. Jackman, secretaries of the Saskatchewan and Alberta Union of Municipal associations, important changes are being made at once involving immediate action by the department as follows:

Notifying all occupants of crown lands held under homestead entry for five years or more that if patent is not applied for within a specified time the entry will be cancelled.

More rigidly enforcing the regulations of homestead and pre-emption, so that the occupant will be compelled to complete his duties within the specified time or lose his land.

Investigation of all school land contracts and if it is found that the payments are in arrears the contract will be cancelled unless payment forthcoming.

Dairy Produce, Market Report

The Dairy and Cold Storage Branch at Ottawa announces the inauguration of a Dairy Market Produce Report. A weekly market letter will be sent free of charge to any farmer or firm who asks to have their name placed on the mailing lists. This should prove of considerable assistance to farmers in deciding what their butter is worth, a great deal of dissatisfaction existing in many communities at present over the disparagement in the prices offered by dealers for first-class dairy butter and prices quoted to the consumer in the city. Address letters to the Dairy Commissioner, Ottawa.

ing to read the article in your last issue headed 'Rye Resists Drought Well' but I believe that it should be pointed out that most stock raisers and agricultural experts have found that Rye is not a suitable feed for breeding stock as it is thought by many of them to induce abortion. For stockers however it is much better than wheat and in some sections, fall Rye has been pastured as soon as it comes through in the spring and not allowed to head out. If the cattle cannot keep it down sufficiently to prevent heading the mower the mower is then run over it and it is then used as hay. By this means Fall Rye has shown good results for two or three seasons as asture. Taking everything into consideration, I consider Rye straw is much better straw for feeding stock than wheat straw—resists drought better and is apparently found more appetizing by the stock.

I believe it should be one of the feeds grown by all farmers especially in a district like that of Chauvin

AT THE TOP OF THE EARTH

In days no further back than five years ago, the glorious scenery of the Canadian Rockies in Central British Columbia, which has been opened up by the construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, were reserved for the intrepid hunter or prospector and the native red man. Today this playground so expansive that distances do not describe it, is virtually at the door of the tourists, travellers, alpinists and sportsmen. This unspoiled wonderland may be penetrated to the very heart in luxurious modern railway trains. The Grand Trunk Pacific Railway has issued a handsomely illustrated folder descriptive of a "Tour of a Thousand Wonders" through the Candaian Rockies—Mount Robson route, embracing Jasper Park, Mount Robson Park, the historic Skeena River country, the land of Totem Poles, so rich in history and romance, and embracing an ocean passage of 700 miles through protected waters of the 'Inside Passage' of the North Pacific coast, from Prince Rupert to Vancouver, Victoria, and Seattle, on the steamships 'Prince Rupert' or 'Prince George' of the Grand Trunk Pacific Steamship Co., conceded to be the best, finest and fastest vessels in regular North Pacific coast service. A most interesting side trip from Prince Rupert to Anyox, B.C., is also described. Copies of this folder may be had on application to any Grand Trunk Pacific Agent.
